Edith Foss Materials

- Edith Foss (26 April 1907- ), nee Wallner, was a Viennese Jewish convert to the Catholic faith. (Her name was Fössl, but she thought it best to change it to Foss, because, she said, Americans would pronounce the Germanic form as "fossil."). In 1942, her director, Rev. Ludger Born, S.J., advised her to flee Austria because the Gestapo had discovered that she was engaged in subversive activities -- namely, bringing food to Jewish children at the Relief Center. She escaped by taking a train to the area of the Italian border and then walked across to safety thanks to a friend who gave Edith her passport and her own courage.
